The Law of Sacrifice

The Law of Sacrifice is defined as that which we are to give up in order to receiving what it is we desire. This principle is applicable to everything in this world. Whether it be on a personal level or business in order to get something we must give up something. To have food we must give up something to receive it. To be able to receive that big business contract the business must give up something in order to get it. It doesn't matter what the circumstances is. In comparison with the Law of Focus it is what we are willing not to do in order to focus on what it is we desire. The two laws have a different focal point but come to the same conclusion – we have to give up something to get something. Abraham was willing to give up his only son in order to get what he wanted which was God's favor. In doing so, Abraham not only was spared the life of his son but gain more abundance than could he have ever imagined.

The final law identified within this story is also reflected in Abraham when he spoke to his son about God providing a lamb to be sacrificed. Abraham could have told his son about God's requested sacrifice and in doing so would have caused an outcome different than what God had requested. However, Abraham praised God in his answer to his son's question and not alarm Isaac as well. Abraham in his speaking gave God the ability to know that while he was going to go through with sacrificing Isaac he believed God would provide his own sacrifice and it was this belief that he did not tell Isaac of the planned sacrifice. By doing this, Abraham placed him in a position of being able to receive the blessing of God of providing His own sacrifice instead of Abraham's son – The Law of Giving and Receiving.
